Minister Attends UN Conference on Women

OTTAWA, July 11, 1980 -- The Minister Responsible for the Status of Women, the Honourable Lloyd Axworthy, left Ottawa today to attend the United Nations Decade for Women Conference in Copenhagen.

During the conference, which marks the mid-point in the Decade for Women, Mr. Axworthy will table the National Plan of Action on the status of women, entitled "Towards Equality for Women," and developed by the federal government. The Minister will also table the plans of action of five of the provincial governments.

The conference's themes of Equality, Development, and Peace were echoed in the remarks of the Minister as he pledged that in spite of times of economic restraint, the government would strive to alleviate the unfair economic and social burdens that women have borne for so long. "Having given recognition to the situation, we are now going to remedy it," Mr. Axworthy said.

Canada's participation at the conference is in accordance with the government's commitment to the World Plan of Action. Canada has contributed $58,000 to the N.G.O. Forum in Copenhagen to assist third world women to attend the conference. It underlines Canada's concern for the involvement of third world women in development issues.

communities

and its development

communities have been identified as critical to the success of sustainable development and the implementation of environmental management systems. This paper highlights the importance of communities in the development of sustainable communities.

Keywords: sustainable development, environmental management, community involvement, environmental issues

Abstract. This paper discusses the importance of communities in the development of sustainable development. It highlights the role of communities in the implementation of environmental management systems and the importance of community involvement in the development of sustainable communities. The paper concludes by suggesting that communities play a key role in the development of sustainable development.

Introduction. Sustainable development is a concept that has been developed over the past two decades. It is based on the principles of environmental protection, social justice, and economic growth. The concept of sustainable development is often used to describe the way in which society should live and work in order to ensure that the environment is protected, that people are treated fairly, and that the economy is sustainable.

Beatrice Watts, an Inuit teacher, is the program co-ordinator for Native Education Teacher Programs at the Labrador East Integrated School Board. She has been involved with Native and multicultural groups.

Anne Marie Perry, a teacher, has also been a partner in a family business as well as corporate manager of a store serving an area of high unemployment. This involved training and assisting an all-female staff, mostly single parents. In 1979, Mrs. Perry was admitted to l'Ordre du Mérite Acadien de l'Ile-du-Prince-Edouard, in recognition of her work for the survival of Acadians.

Dianne Harkin is a farm partner, managing and operating a family farm in Ontario. She is the founder and chairperson of Women for the Survival of Agriculture. Mrs. Harkin was the co-ordinator and chairperson of the First National Farm Women's Conference, which took place last year.

Shirley Alcoe has a doctorate of nursing education. She is presently teaching at the Faculty of Nursing, University of New Brunswick. Her specialty is community health.

The members will serve a three year term. There remains one vacancy in Ontario.

Ms. Pépin, a registered nurse by profession has been National Co-ordinator of the Canadian Committee for Fertility Research.

"I am concerned about the continuity of the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women," said Mr. Axworthy. "The Council has an ambitious programme planned for the next year and it needs authority and leadership." Ms. Pépin was appointed vice-president in 1979, and will finish the term of office of the President, vacated by the resignation of Doris Anderson in January.

The Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women will be holding a full meeting March 9-10-11, in Ottawa. Mr. Axworthy will be meeting with the Council on Monday afternoon.

Canada Tables Plan of Action at U.N. Conference on Women

COPENHAGEN, July 15, 1980 -- The Minister Responsible for the Status of Women, the Honourable Lloyd Axworthy, who leads the Canadian delegation to the United Nations Decade for Women Conference here, described the national plan of action as the federal government's commitment for change.

Mr. Axworthy stressed that he supports the World Draft Program of Action, and he urged that national mechanisms be set up to implement these plans. "Given the federal structure of our country, all three levels of government must be committed to policies that will enhance the status of women," he said. "One of my priorities is to discuss with my provincial colleagues the steps that have been taken to ensure that women's rights are respected in all provincial policies."

Mr. Axworthy said that inequalities still exist between women and men and these are directly related to the differences in their economic situations. Occupational segregation of women and men adds to the problems faced by women. ["It is the federal government's conviction that these inequalities can be diminished by ensuring equal pay for work of equal value, affirmative action, and training programs for women."]

In advising the conference that Canada would be signing the Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination Against Women, Mr. Axworthy paid tribute to the many Canadian representatives who played a significant part in drafting the Convention. He also spoke of Canada's efforts internationally through the Canadian International Development Agency to assist women in developing countries.
